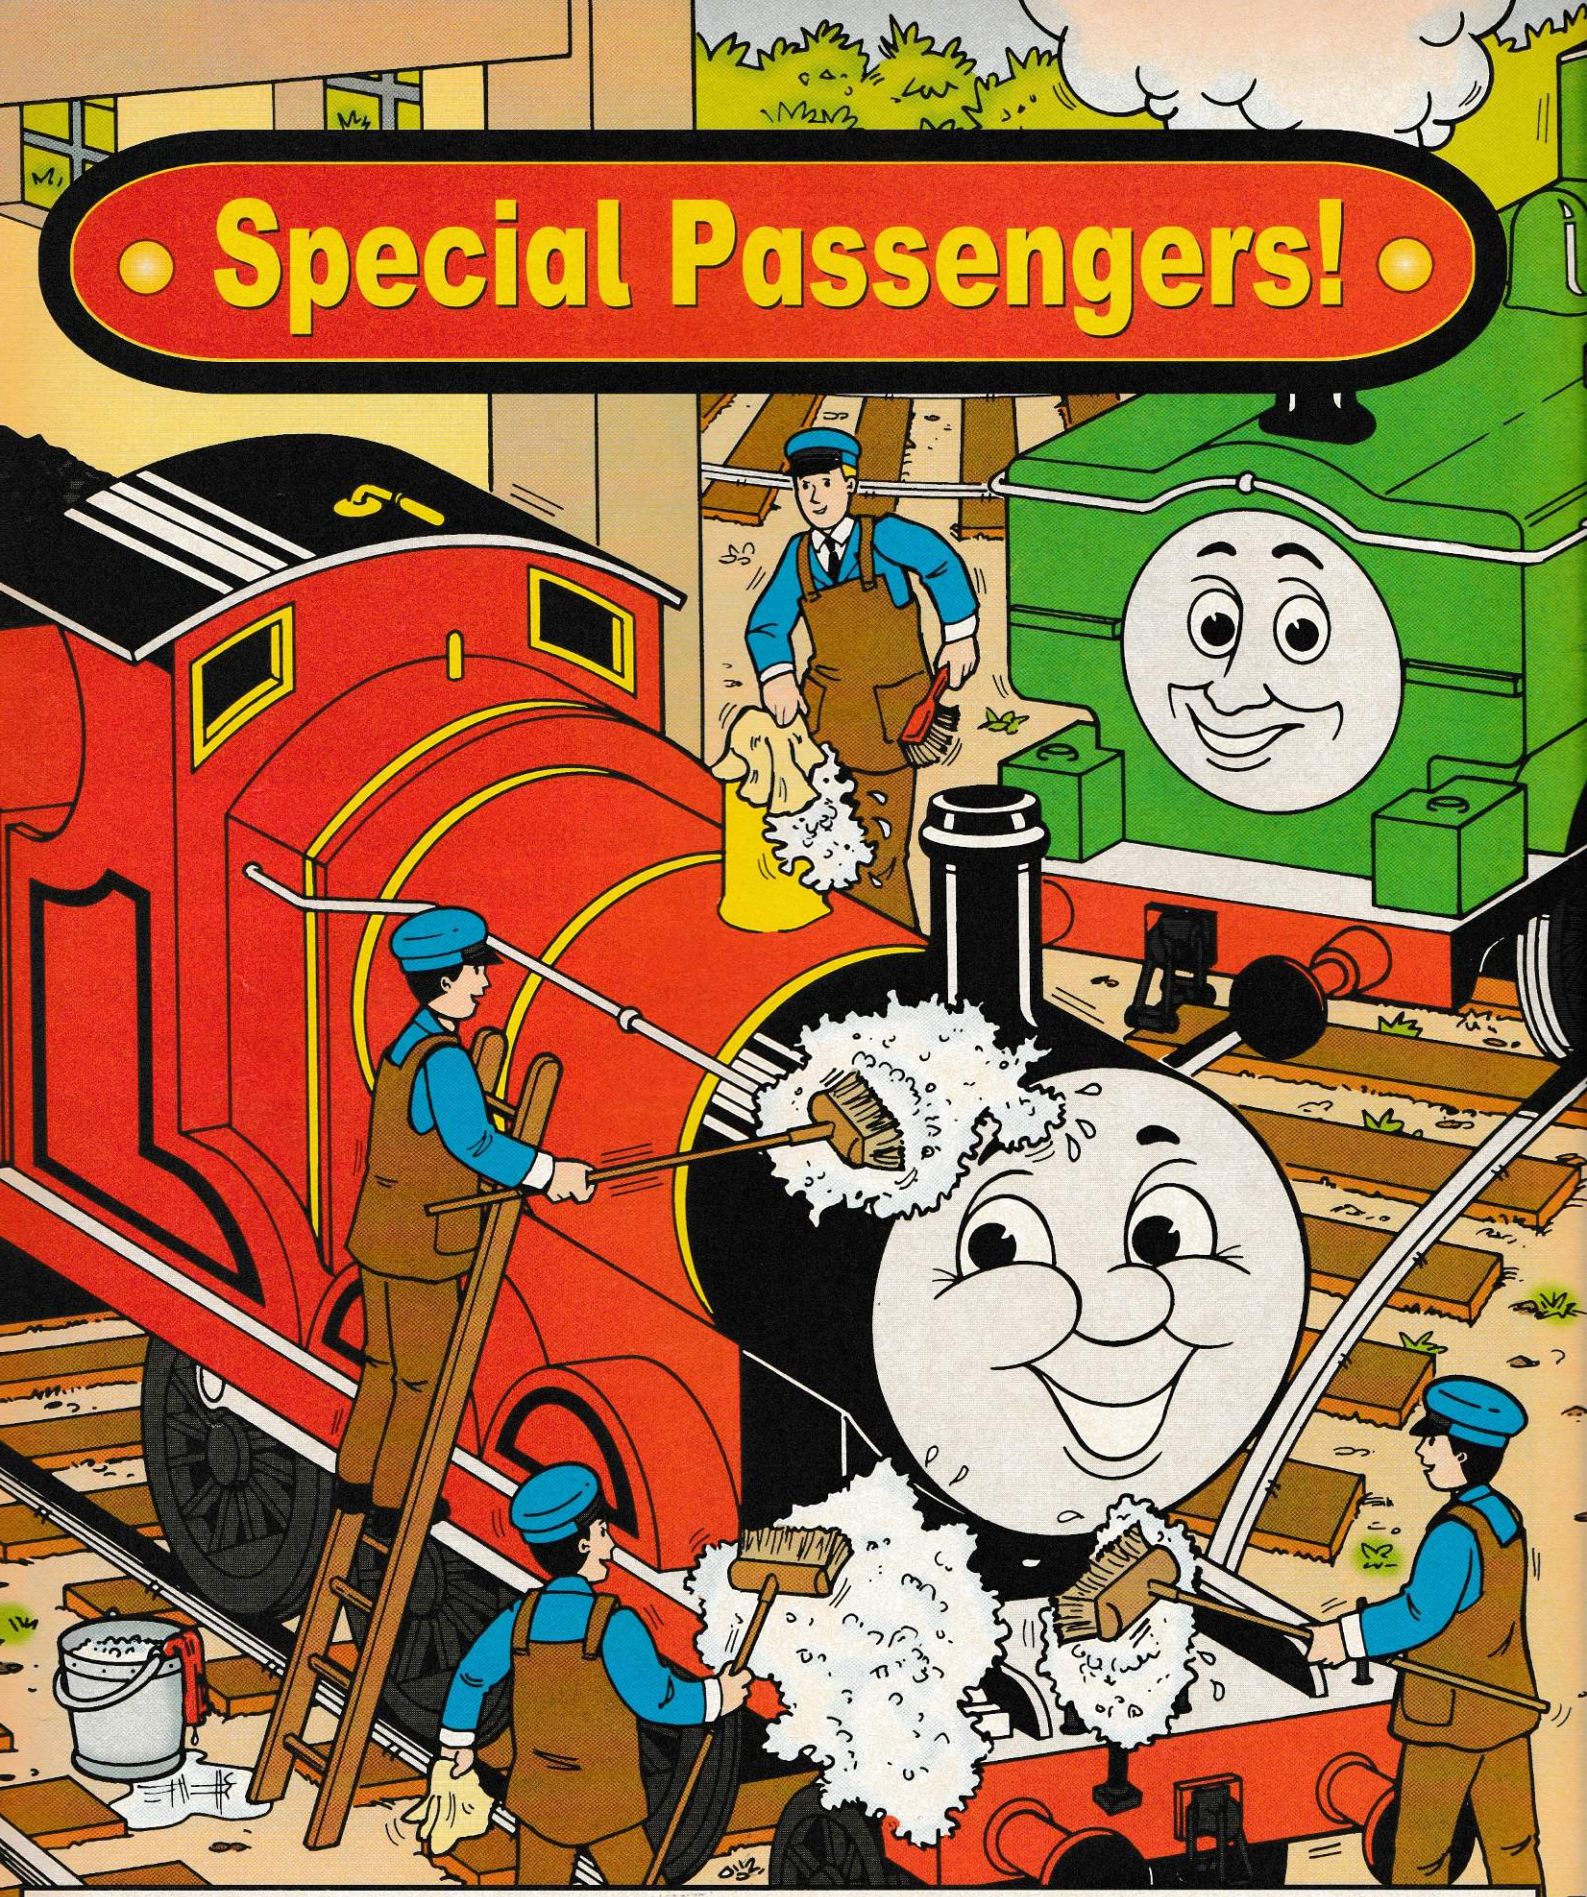
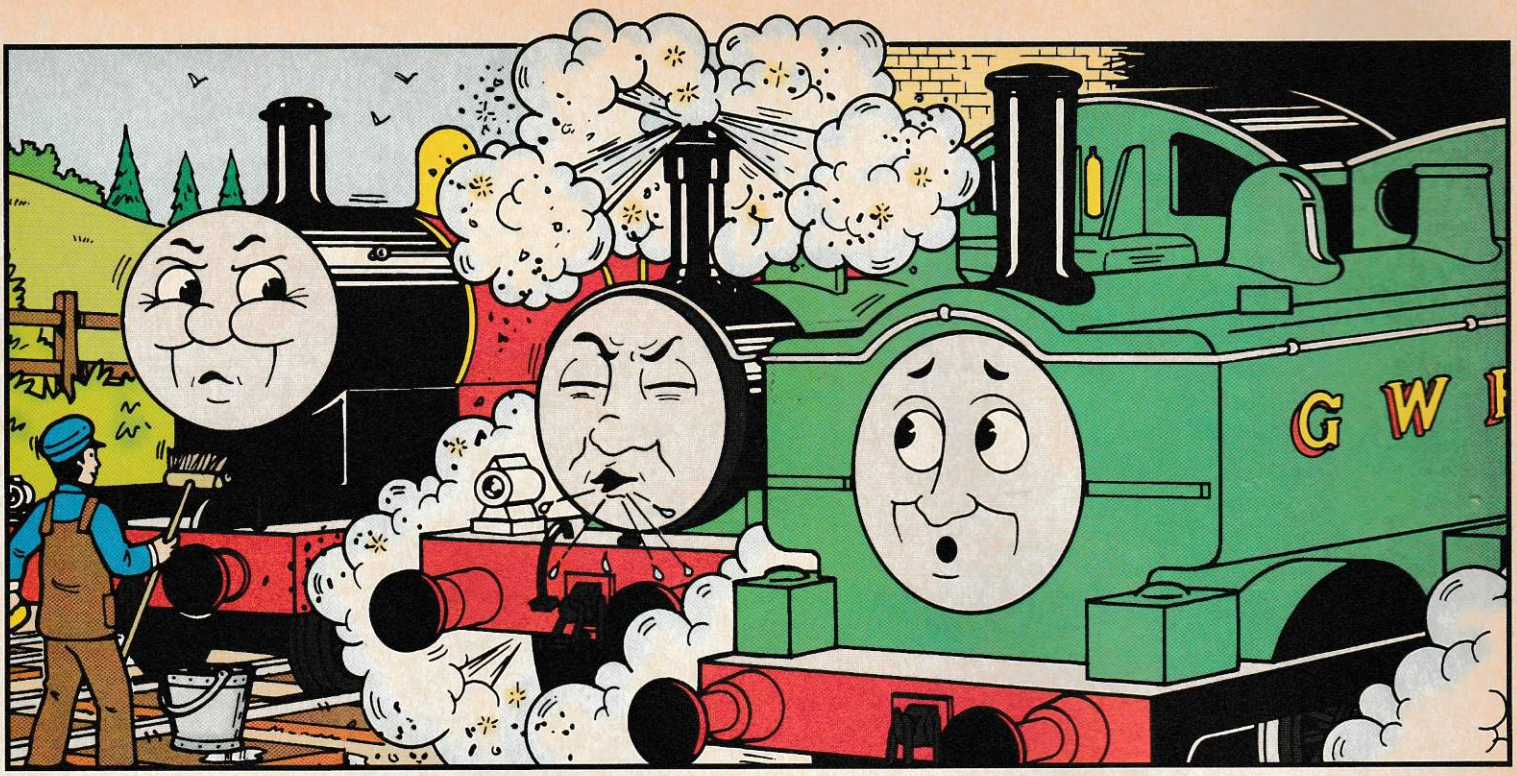
Special Passengers!



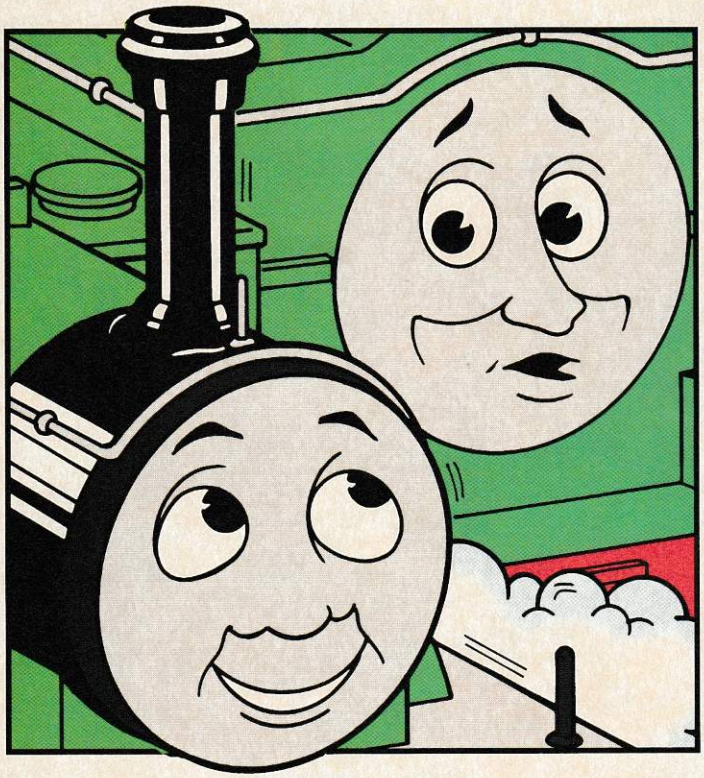
1. James liked to think he was a really splendid red engine. So when the Fat Controller ordered him to be washed and polished, ready to carry the Mayor, James puffed with pride.

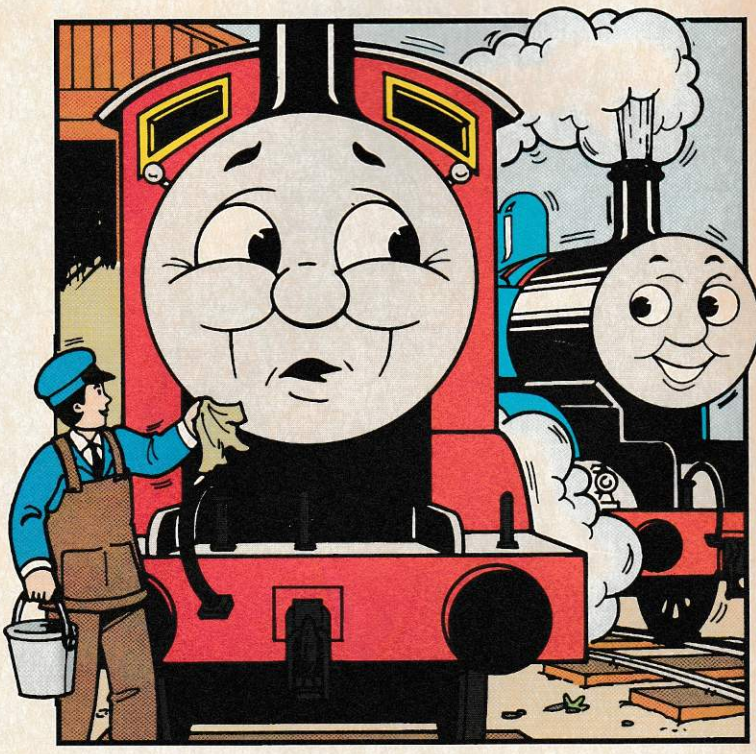
2. Soon the men set to work, hosing down James' paintwork in the Main Station yard. "Don't forget to dust my brass dome until that sparkles in the sunshine, too!" snorted James.



3. Duck and Oliver shunted trucks nearby. "Just listen to James giving orders as if he runs the railway," hissed Duck. Oliver went to speak but he began to cough and splutter.

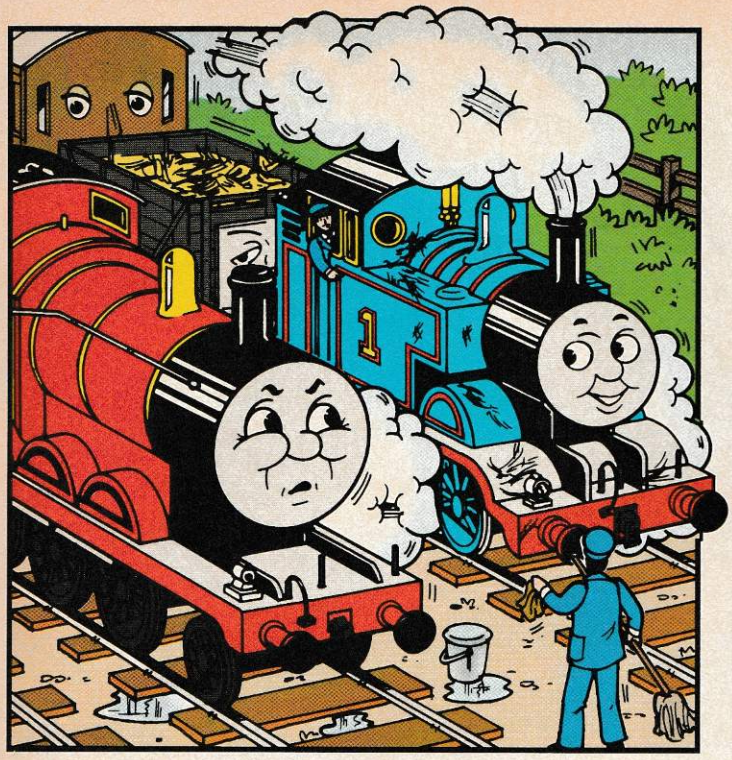
4. He blew out lots of smoky sparks from his funnel. They drifted across the yard. "Hey! Look out, Oliver!" cried James. "You'll make me dirty. I'm to carry a special passenger!"



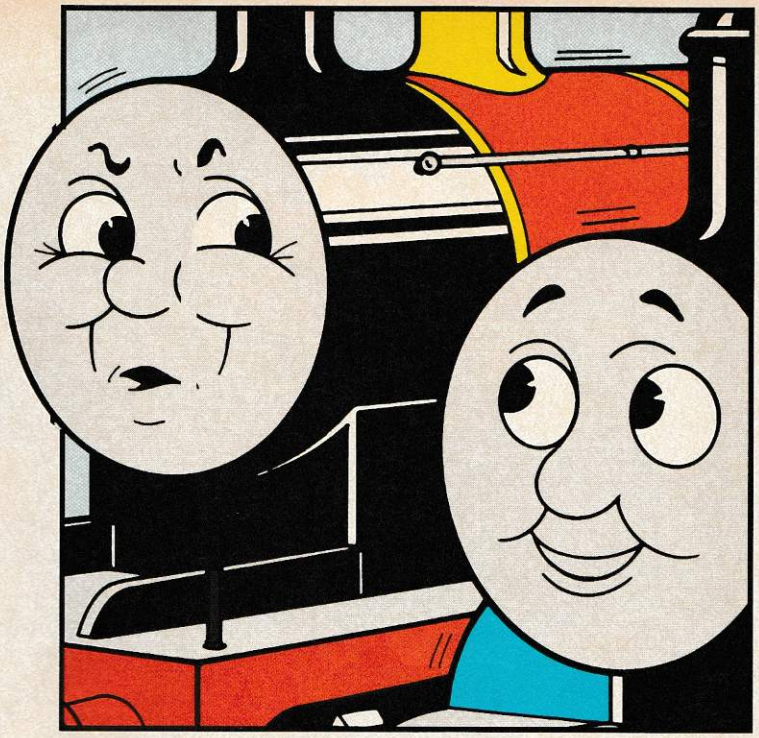


5. "As if we didn't know!" snorted Duck, angrily. "Cheek! James might have asked if you're feeling all right, Oliver!" "I'm fine. I just burned some bad coal," he replied.

6. James didn't mean to be selfish. But all he could think of was his important task. Soon Thomas returned from delivering supplies to a farm. "Keep away!" shouted James.

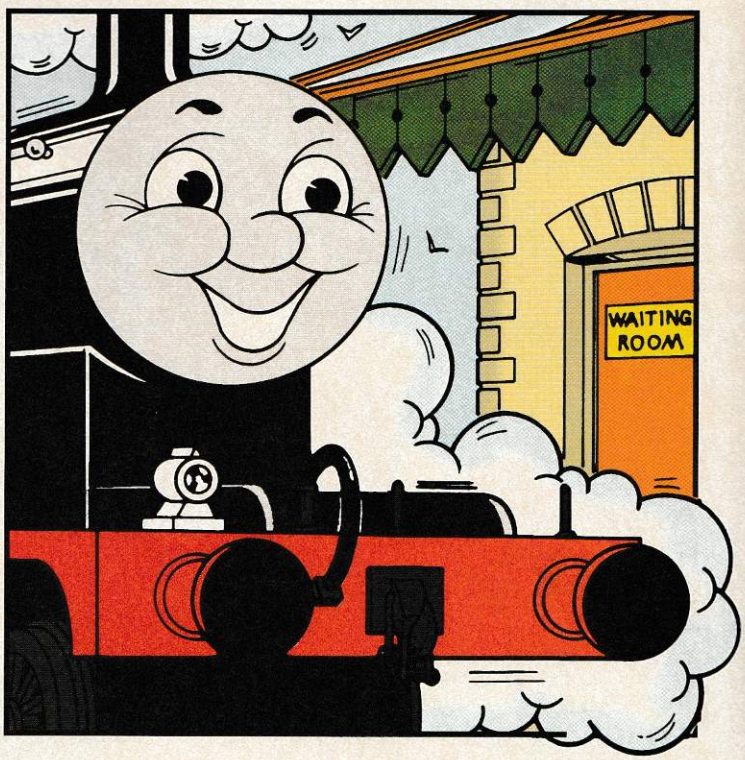


7. “Phe-ew! You smell like a mouldy haystack!” he added, unkindly. “Only a smart engine can carry a special passenger.” “You’re wrong,” called Thomas, who also pulled Clarabel.



8. “I’ve just collected one at the last station,” he added. “A likely tale! Pah! You’re pulling my piston, Thomas!” scoffed James. “Oh, am I?” teased Thomas, rolling on past him.

9. Thomas stopped at one of the Main Station platforms. James was far too busy having his face wiped to see a man step out of Clarabel. The guard helped him to unload something, too.



10. Shortly, James was ready. How he gleamed and glistened. “Spotless! What a grand sight I am, even if I say so myself!” he boasted. By now, Thomas had puffed across the yard.

11. So the platform was clear for James to use. He pulled up beside it while he waited to be coupled to his carriage. “I wouldn’t stand there if I were you, James,” warned Thomas.

12. “My special passenger is in the Waiting Room.” “You just don’t want him to see how smart I look,” sniffed James. Suddenly, a big brush popped out of the Waiting Room chimney.

13. It pushed out a cloud of soot that settled on James below. He was filthy! "I did try to warn you, James," said Thomas. The brush vanished and then a sweep appeared, carrying it.

14. "There's my special passenger," said Thomas. Oliver and Duck began to laugh, when James had to be washed all over again. James' face turned as red as his paintwork!

The Magic Spell!

Sometimes, when Skarloey couldn't sleep, Boco would tell him a story. One night, Boco told him a story about a silver engine and a wizard.

"Once upon a time there was a very fast, elegant, silver engine called Silver," said Boco. "He thought he was the best engine in the land because he was so shiny and quick. One day, a tramp asked him for a lift and he refused, saying the tramp was too dirty to travel on a smart, shiny engine like himself. But the tramp was really a wizard and he cast a spell on Silver to teach him a lesson."

"What spell?" asked Skarloey, eagerly.

"He turned him into a rusty, slow engine," said Boco. "Silver was never smart and fast again. The other engines laughed when they saw him and called him Tramp."

"Serves him right for being so selfish," said Skarloey. He went to sleep, thinking what a mean engine Silver was.

The next day, Skarloey had to take some animal feed to a farm in the country. It was one of his favourite runs. He loved to look at the beautiful countryside with its green trees and bushes. But today, Skarloey was horrified to see that the leaves on the trees had all changed colour. Instead of green leaves, they were yellow, brown or orange.

"Oh no, someone's cast a spell on them!" Skarloey thought in dismay. Suddenly a leaf fluttered down to the ground. Then another. And another. The little engine was really worried. Now, the wizard's spell was making the leaves fall off the trees!

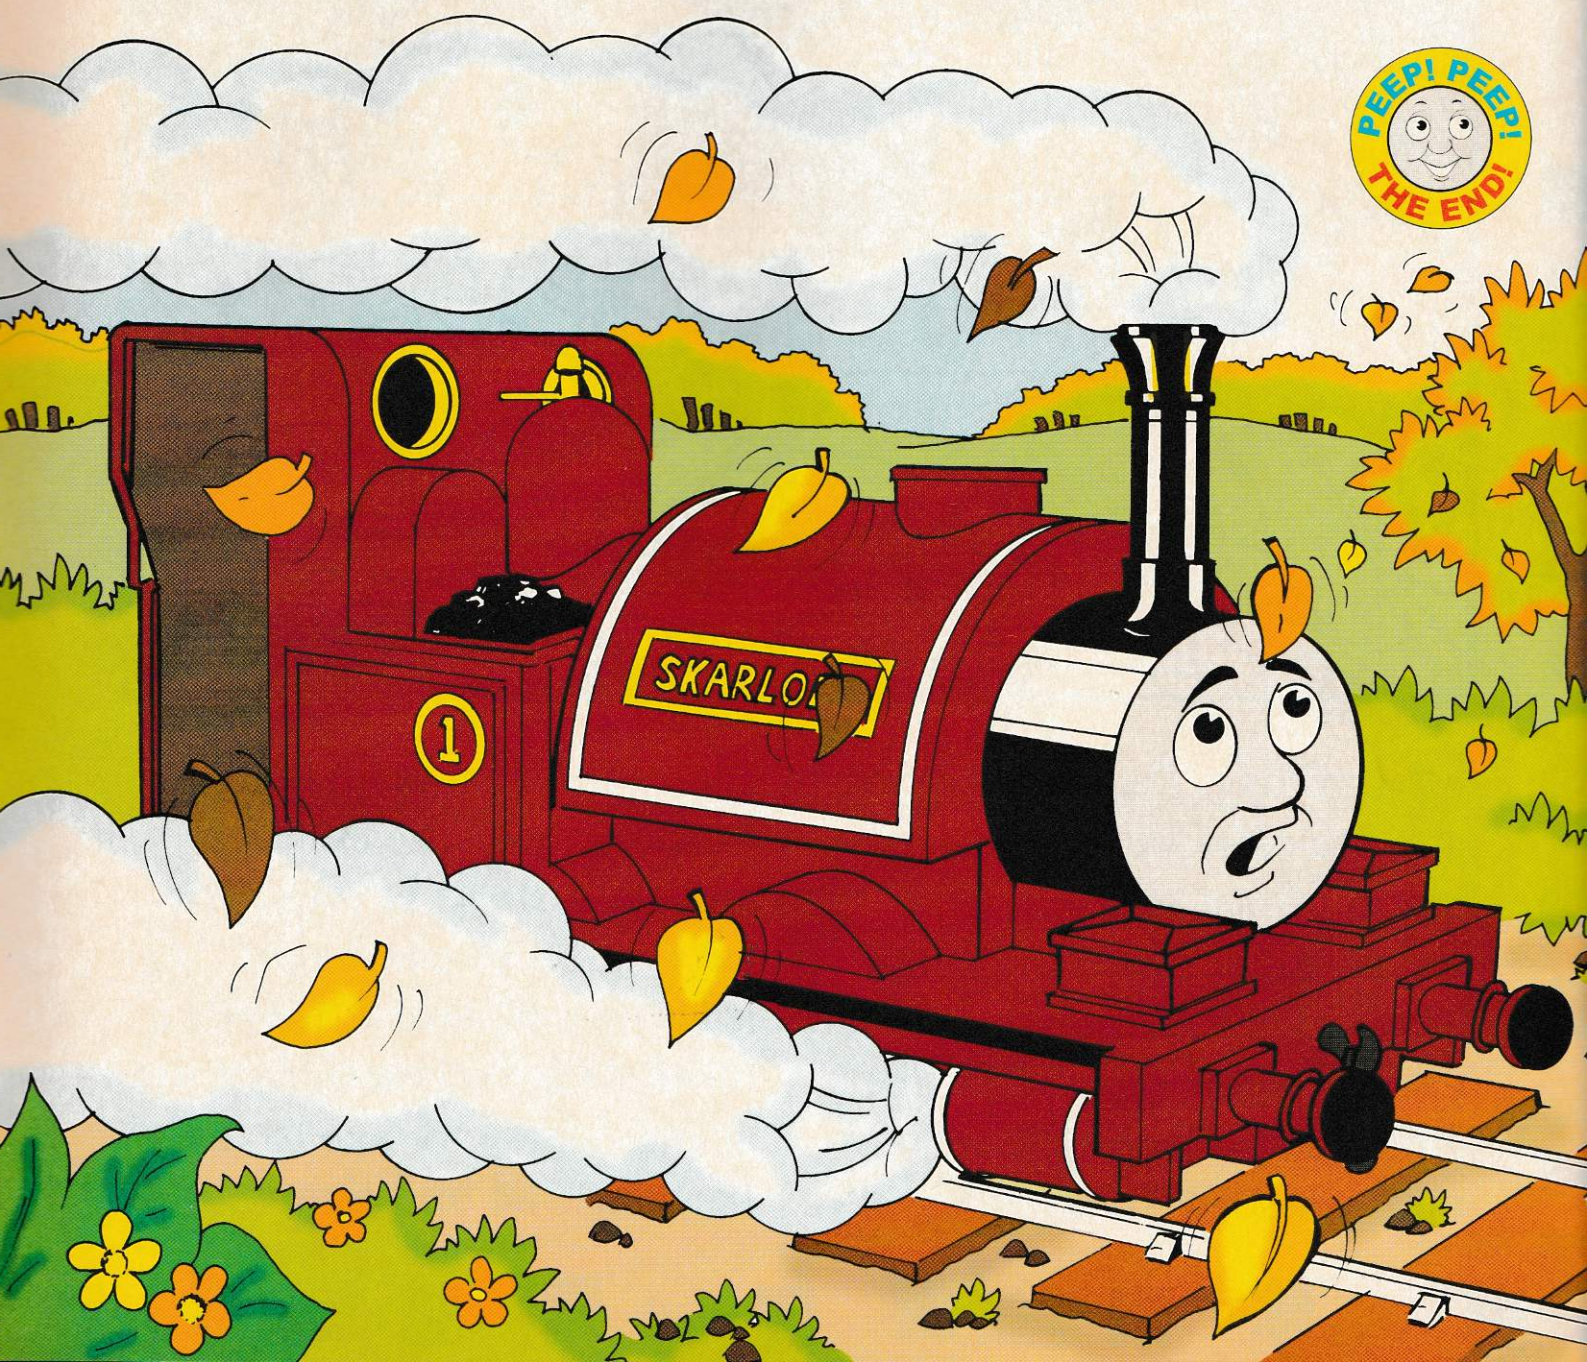
He couldn't wait to get back to the station to tell Boco. "Something terrible's happened!" he gasped when he saw Boco. "The trees must have upset the wizard and he's cast a spell on them! All the leaves are changing colour and dropping off!"

"Oh, Skarloey, no one's cast a spell on the trees!" chuckled Boco. "Leaves always change colour and fall off the trees in Autumn. New leaves grow again in the spring!"

"Oh," said Skarloey. He did feel very silly. But he was pleased to hear the leaves would grow back on the trees again in spring. And he was even more pleased that there wasn't really a wizard casting spells everywhere!

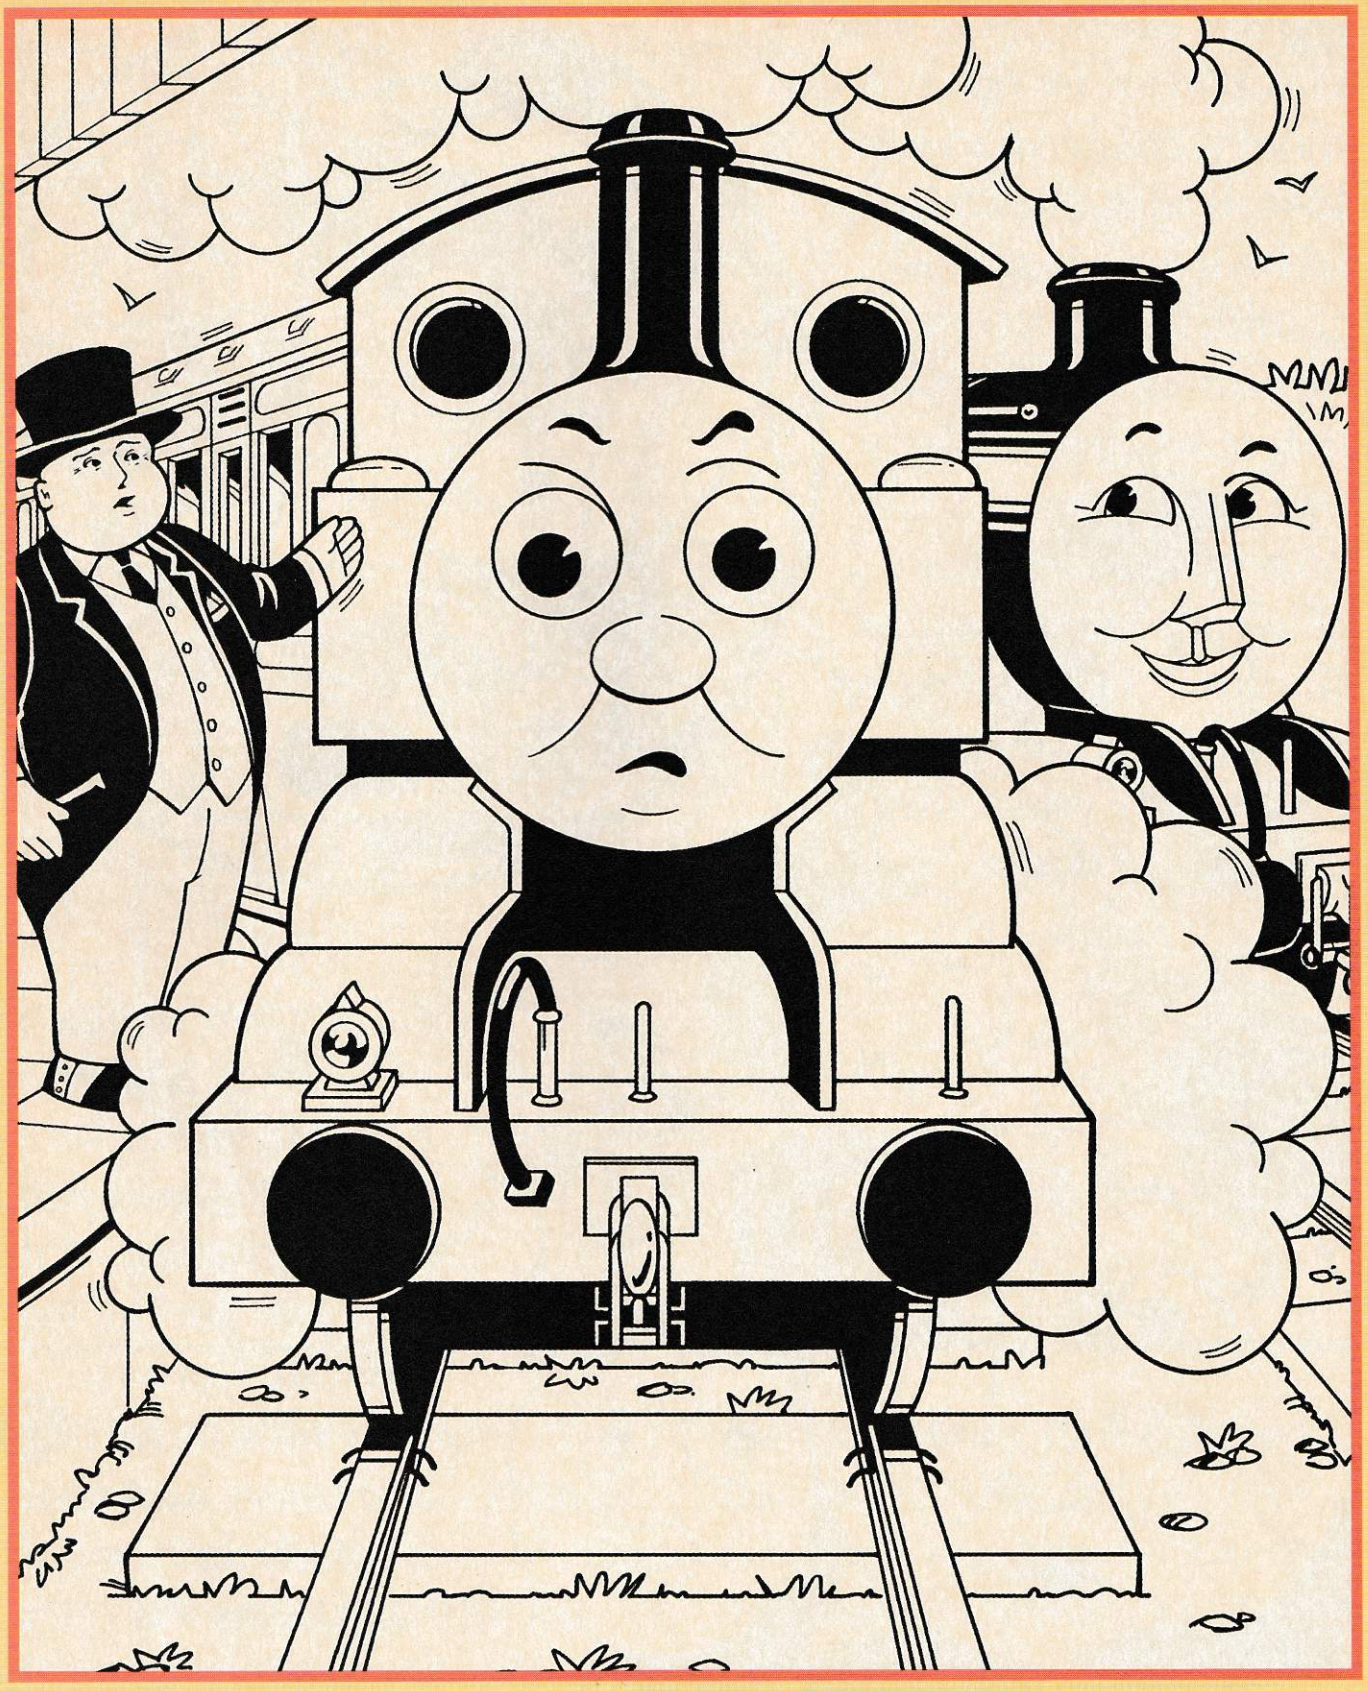


A read & colour story

Sodor Rock!

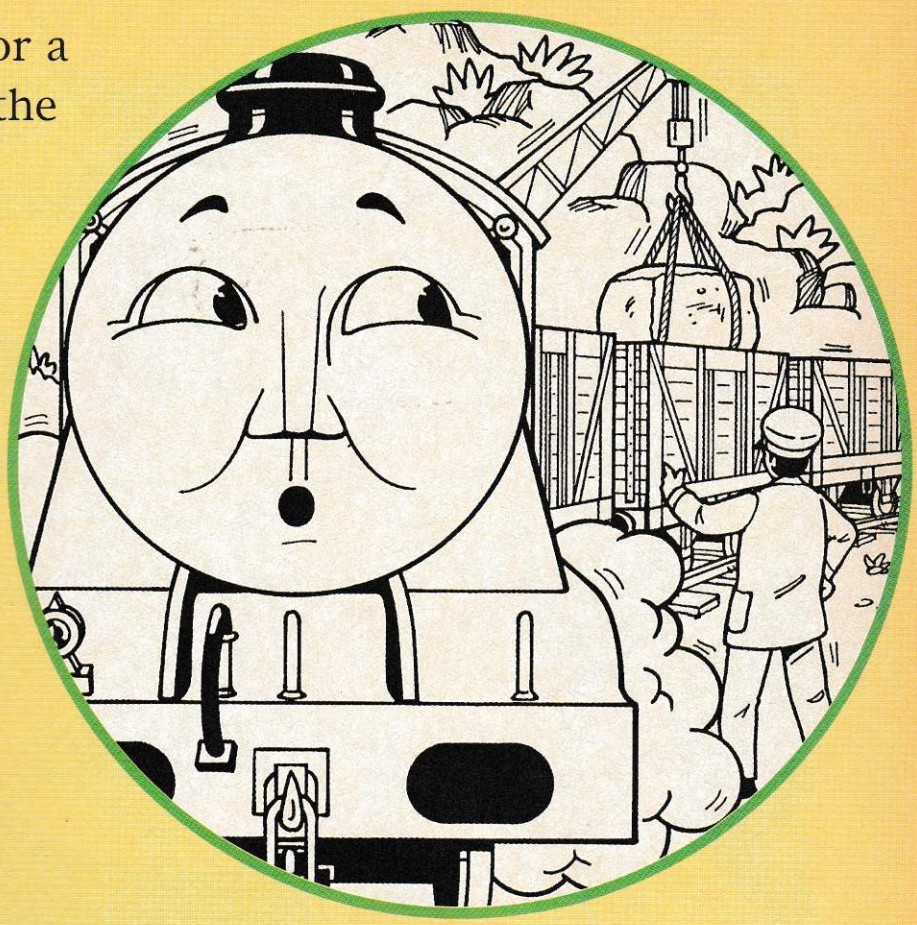
1 One day, Thomas stopped at a sea-side station. He was met by some children who waved to him with the sticks of sea-side rock they were eating. "Peep, peep! That rock looks tasty, save some for me!" whistled Thomas.

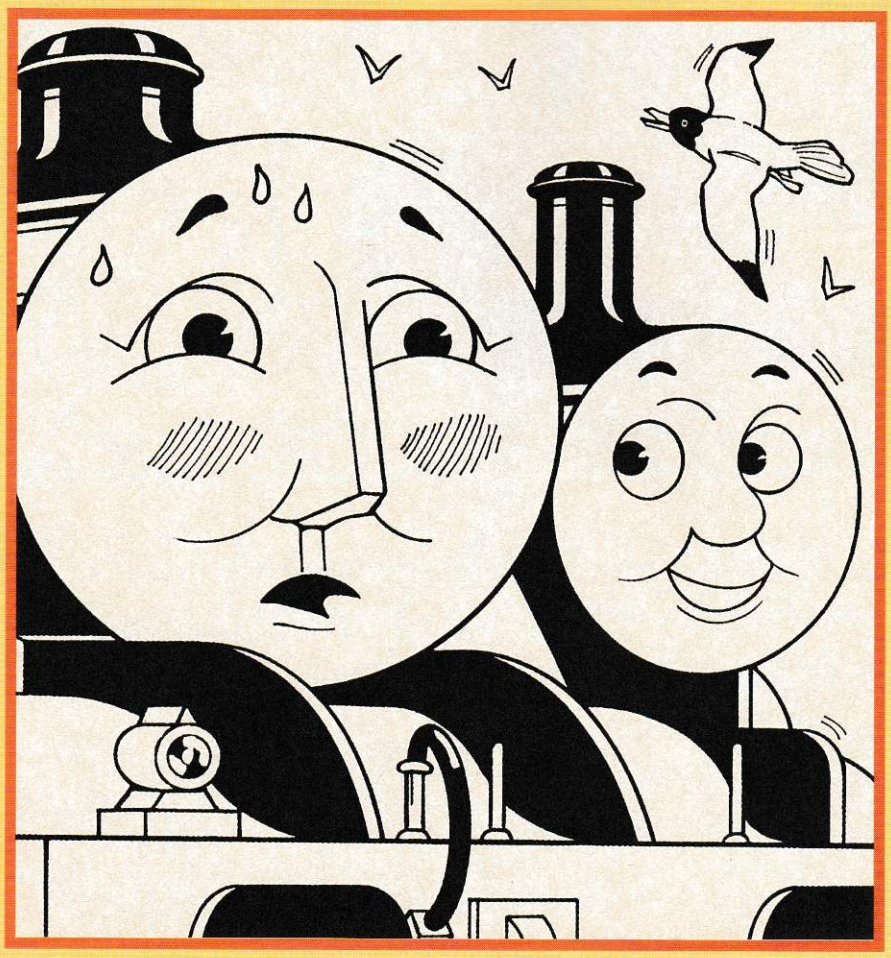
Later, Thomas was talking to Gordon about the children and their sticks of rock. The Fat Controller overheard. "As it happens, Gordon, there's a lot of rock for you to pick up at the quarry to take to the harbour!" he told him.



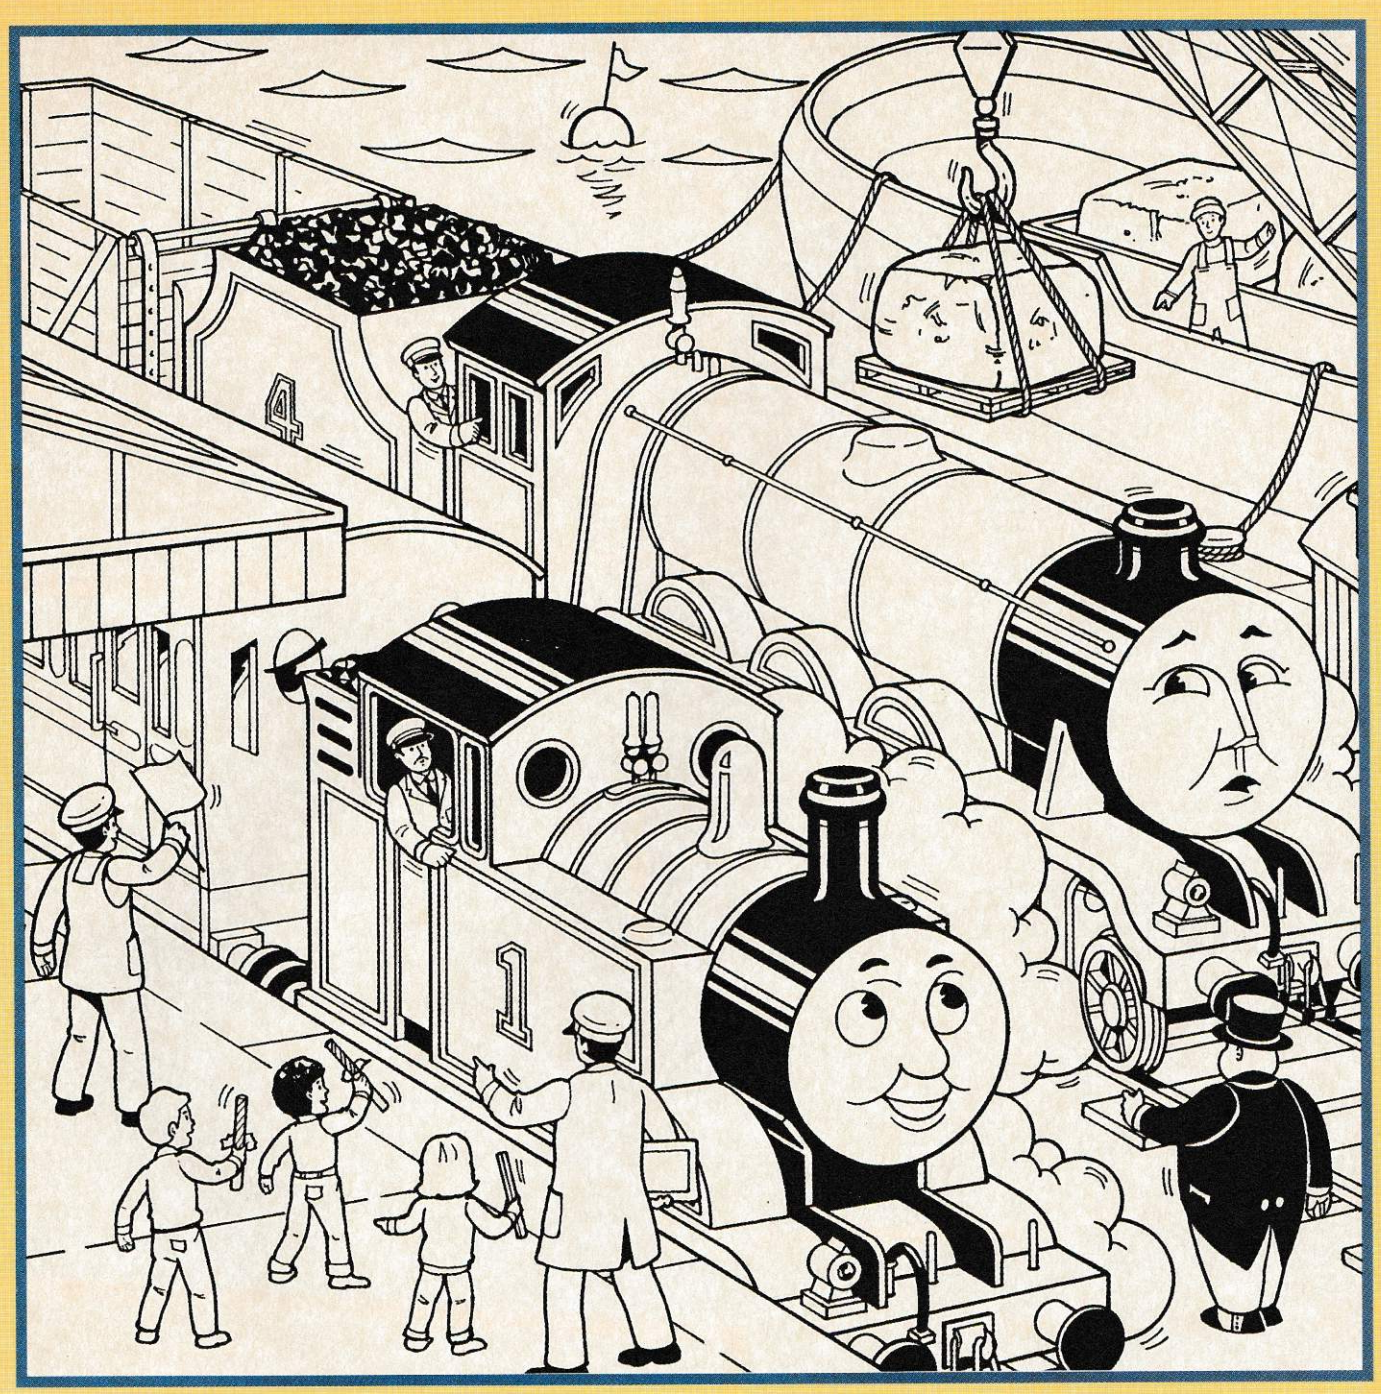
2 "Sounds easy to me!" grinned Gordon, but Thomas was cross. "Why can't I pick up the rock?" he huffed, crossly. The Fat Controller said firmly, "there's rather a lot of it so Gordon had better go!" Gordon steamed off.

3 But Gordon was in for a shock when he reached the quarry. His trucks were loaded with giant blocks of rock by a big crane. "I didn't expect this!" he puffed. Gordon's driver laughed. "Surely you didn't expect to pick up sticks of sea-side rock at the quarry, Gordon!" The big engine felt silly, "I had sticks of rock on my mind after talking to Thomas!"





4 Gordon struggled all the way to the harbour. When he arrived Thomas was there, grinning. "I'm glad you got the job after all, Gordon. That rock looks hard and heavy and good for nothing!" he called. The Fat Controller was on the dock in charge of loading, and overheard. "But this rock is special, Thomas," he said.



5 "It's needed on the mainland to rebuild a church. Sodor rock is the best you can get!" he continued. The Fat Controller explained that people from all over knew how good it was. Some children had just got out of Thomas' carriages, Annie and Clarabel. They had watched the rock being loaded off of Gordon's trucks onto a ship and waved their sticks of rock at Gordon. "We agree, it certainly is the best!" they shouted. The Fat Controller smiled, "but poor Gordon got the wrong end of the stick!"

The Trouble with Mud!

Based on The Railway Series by the Rev W Awdry.

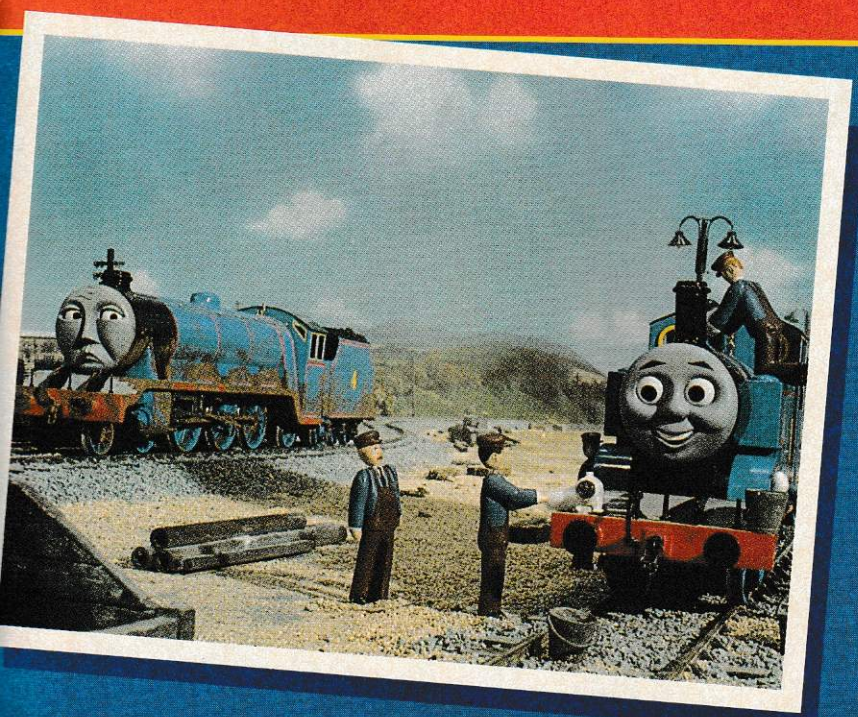
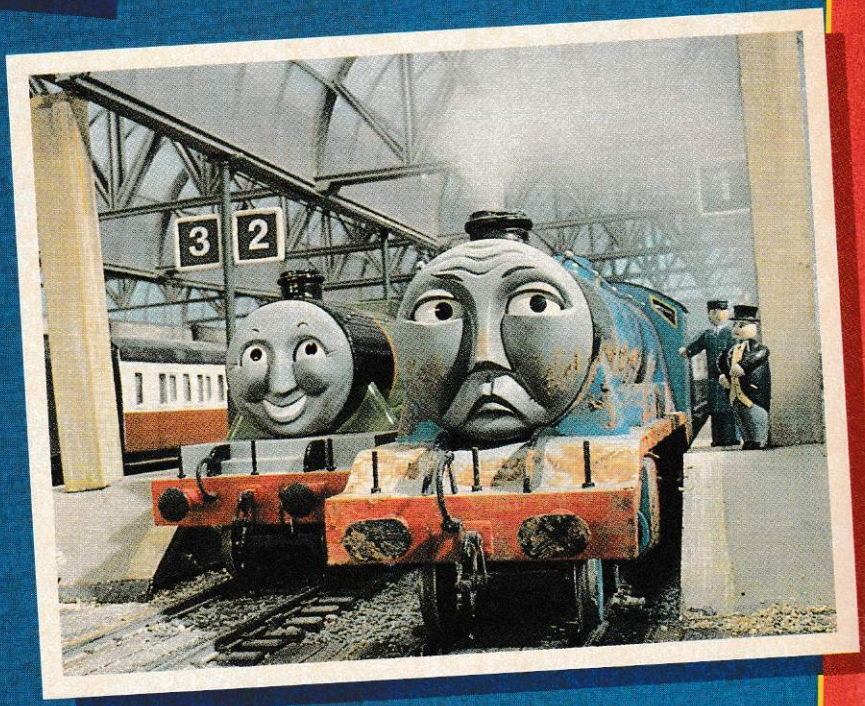
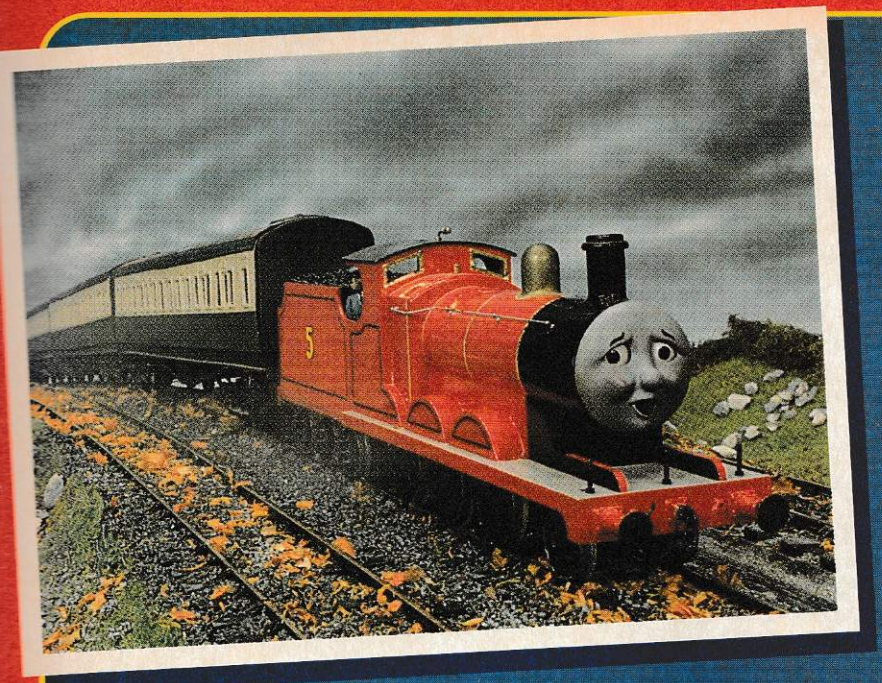
One morning James was being cleaned when Gordon arrived. Mud had blown all over his smart blue paint. "Hello Gordon," called James. "You look as if you've had a mudbath. Be a sensible engine. Have a shower instead."



1 At the next station, Thomas had just finished being cleaned. Gordon's driver said "You'll feel better after a good hose down too, Gordon." "Paah, I'm far too busy to waste time with water," he huffed, as he angrily let off steam.

2 When he steamed into the big station, the Fat Controller saw him. "Goodness gracious," he said. "You can't pull the train. James will have to do it. Gordon you'd better get cleaned straight away." Gordon was soon being washed, and then he had to pull trucks for the rest of the day, while James took his coaches.





3 Gordon warned James, "the hills are slippery and you may need help." James thought Gordon was a know-it-all. But as he reached the hill, his wheels slipped on the leaves. "Help," he whistled, as he started slipping down the hill. Gordon saw everything and decided to help by pushing the train from behind.

4 That night, Thomas asked the Fat Controller if Gordon could pull coaches again. "If you understand that having a wash down is essential to every engine then, you may." "Thank you," grunted Gordon. Then he said to himself, "dirty or clean, I'm a famous machine!"

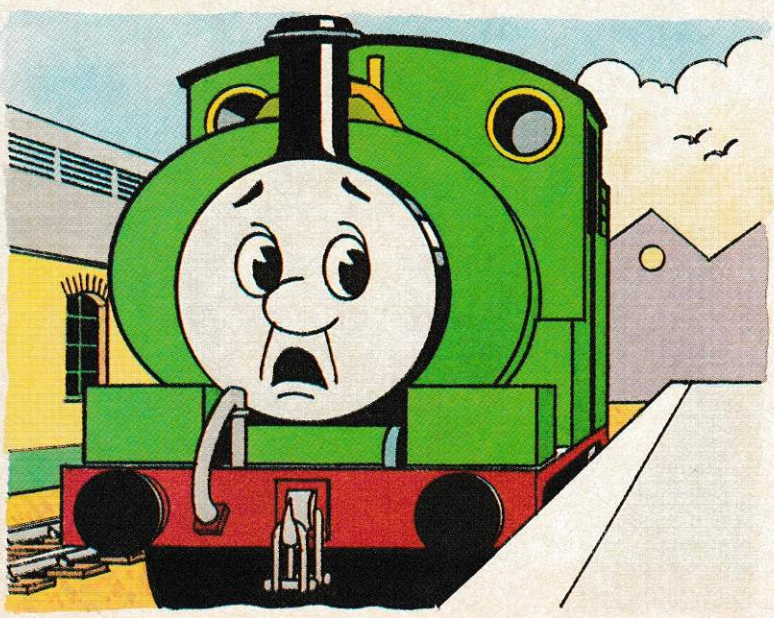
Dressing Up!

One afternoon, Stephen, Bridget and Lady Hatt called at the Main Station to see the Fat Controller. While they all sat in his office, Percy pulled up outside. It was a warm day and the window was wide open. Percy heard the Fat Controller speaking. "On Saturday, you can be the Fat Controller, Stephen, and you can be the stationmaster, Bridget," he told his grandchildren. "I'll make Bridget's uniform," smiled Lady Hatt. "I've got a spare top hat for Stephen to wear," added the Fat Controller. "If it's too big, I'll put some paper inside to make it fit." "Wow! Thanks, Grandma and Grandpa," replied the children, excitedly. "We can't wait!"



Percy was shocked. "Smoke and fire!" he gasped. "Stephen and Bridget are taking over the running of the railway and the Main Station. I'd better tell the other engines right away." Percy hurried off to join Thomas and Duck, who shunted trucks nearby. "Hey, you two!" called Percy. "You'll never guess what's happening. The Fat Controller and the stationmaster are leaving. Stephen and Bridget will be taking over their jobs from Saturday!" Thomas and Duck laughed. "Impossible!" they cried. "You and your silly stories, Percy!"

But then all three engines saw the children with the stationmaster. He gave Bridget his spare peaked cap and whistle. "Percy must be telling the truth, after all," said Duck, in amazement. Before long, all the others had heard the news. That evening, it was the talk of the engine shed.

Meanwhile, at their grandparents' house, Stephen and Bridget tried on their hats while Lady Hatt busily set to work on Bridget's uniform. The Fat Controller found an old jacket and trousers. "I'll soon make them smaller for Stephen," said Lady Hatt.

On Saturday, all the engines felt very sad. They liked the children but they could not imagine working on the railway without the Fat Controller and the friendly stationmaster.

Thomas was waiting at the platform when the Fat Controller arrived with Lady Hatt and his grandchildren. Stephen and Bridget were all dressed up. Stephen looked like the Fat Controller and his sister was very smart as the stationmaster. "Three passengers to go to Wellsworth, please, Thomas," called Stephen. "Stand by to leave," said Bridget. "You heard my grandchildren, Thomas," smiled the Fat Controller. "Right away, Sir!" replied Thomas. "Whatever they say, now they're in charge. It'll be a shame to see you and the stationmaster go." "We're not going anywhere," said the Fat Controller. "Lady Hatt's just taking our grandchildren to a fancy-dress party. Their costumes were my idea."

Thomas began to laugh. "I think we all got the wrong idea, thanks to Percy," he said. "We enjoy dressing up," agreed Stephen and Bridget. "But we wouldn't really want to run a railway. That's very hard work!"

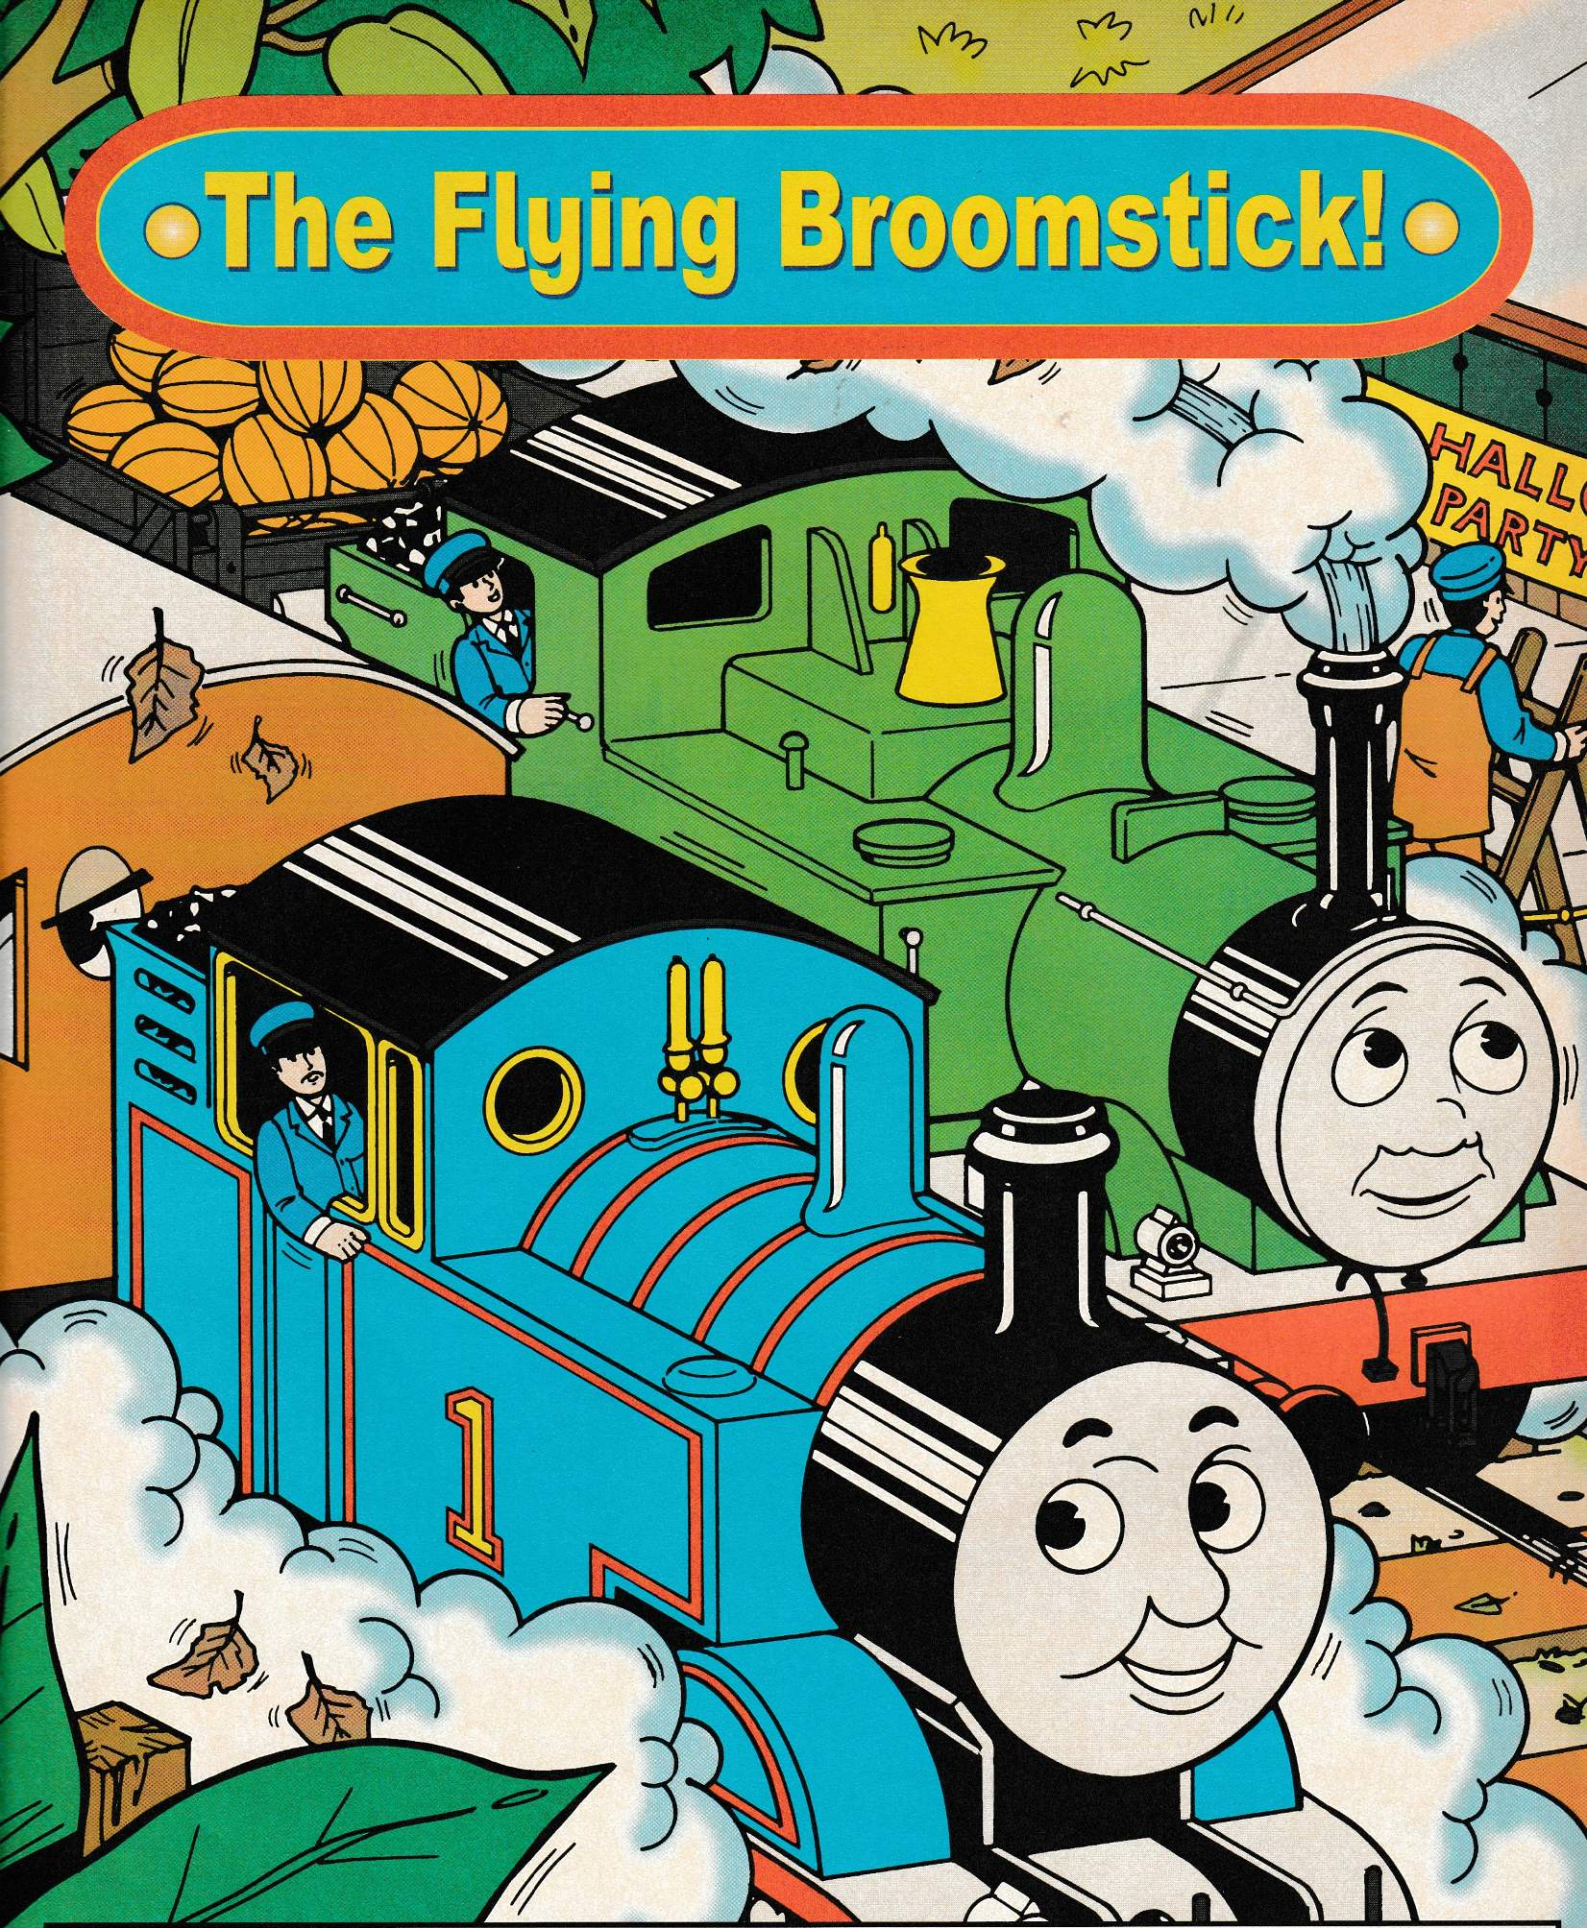
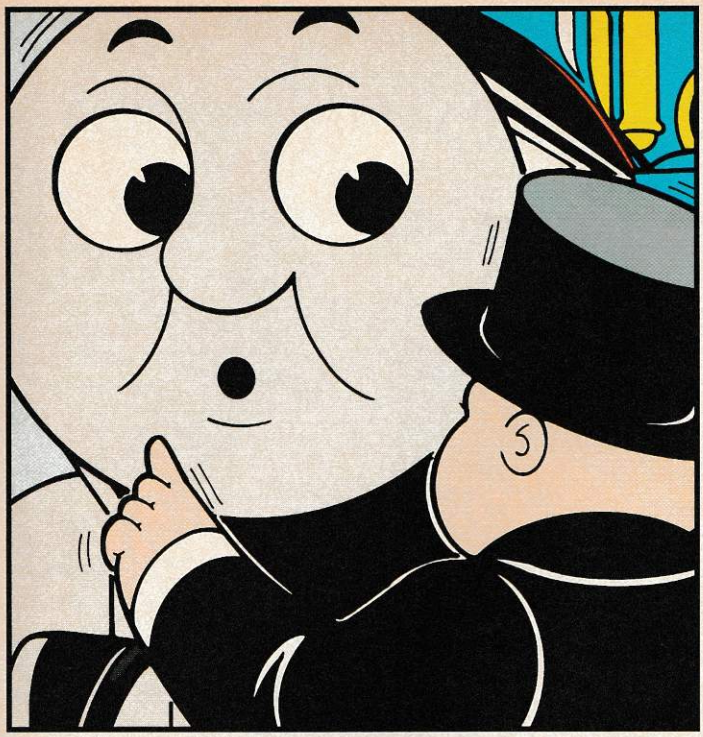
What is Bridget dressed up as?

The Flying Broomstick!



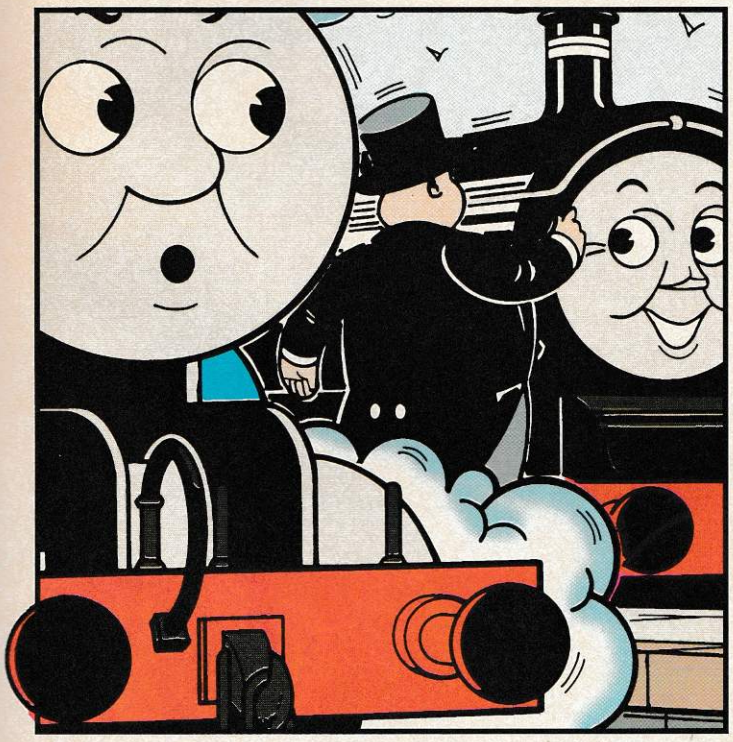
1. As it was Hallowe'en, a party was going to be held after work, for the railway staff and their families at the Main Station. Everyone was very excited, especially all the engines.

2. They all wanted to be Really Useful. So Oliver was pleased to be asked to collect some bright pumpkins. "We'll make lanterns and a huge, delicious pie," the Fat Controller told him.

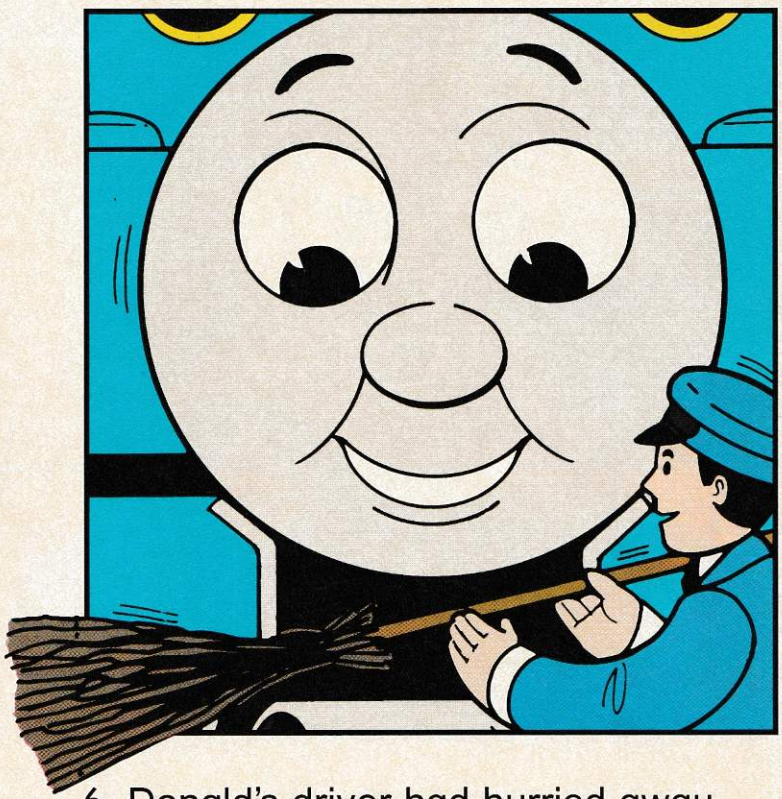


3. Then it was Thomas' turn. "Your task will be to pick up party-goers from the stations along your branch line," said the Fat Controller. "But you can't leave looking like that!"

4. "What do you mean?" asked Thomas, puzzled. "You'll see," replied the Fat Controller. Annie and Clarabel's windows were decorated with stars and moons, made from gold paper.



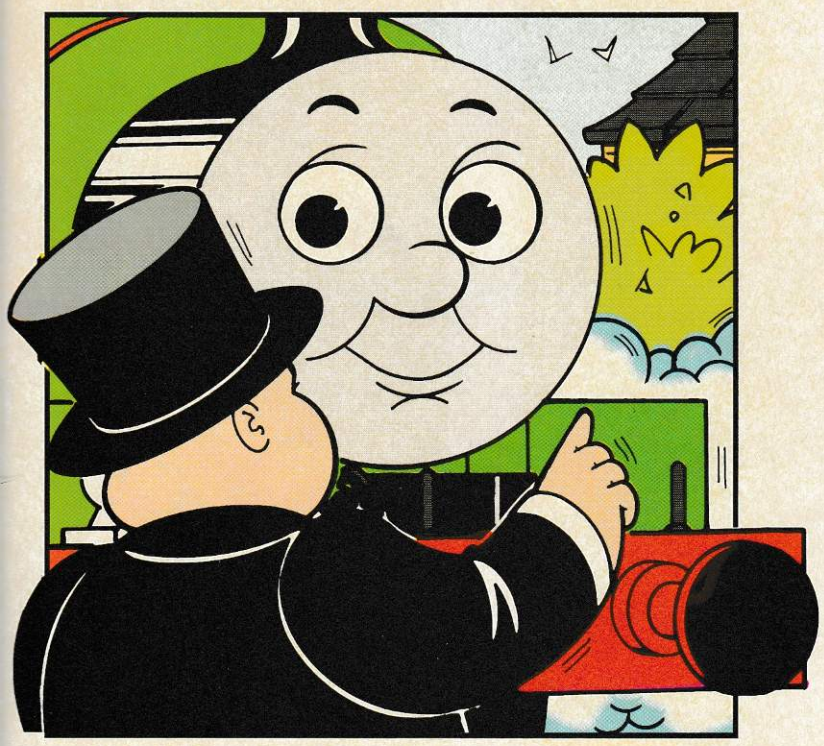
5. "Now we need a big broom for you, Thomas," smiled the Fat Controller. "But I was washed and polished this morning," protested the little tank engine. Next moment, Donald arrived.



6. Donald's driver had hurried away earlier to fetch an unusual broom, made from twigs all tied together. "Splendid!" said the Fat Controller. The broom was fixed to the front of Thomas.

7. Douglas came back from the Works with a special sign for Thomas, too. 'The Flying Broomstick', it read. "What better name for the Hallowe'en Special!" smiled the Fat Controller.

8. "No wonder I needed that broom!" laughed Thomas, as the sign was hung below it. At last, he was ready to leave. "Pah! I wanted to pull the 'Flying Broomstick'," sulked Percy.



9. "I've a job for you as well," the Fat Controller said. "I want you to go to the Big Harbour and get our surprise guest. He will be arriving by ferry." Little Percy quickly cheered up.

10. Meanwhile, Thomas set off. Soon his carriages were full of children in fancy-dress. When Thomas returned to the Main Station, the party was all ready. But Percy had not returned.

11. “The ferry must be late,” said the Fat Controller. “The party can’t start without our guest.” Everyone wondered who he could be. Then they heard a loud ‘Peep!’ “Here’s Percy now!” called Thomas. As Percy puffed through the gloom, he made a magnificent, spooky sight as he blew out a shower of glittering sparks from his funnel. Percy pulled up and one of his carriage doors opened.

12, Suddenly, with a puff of smoke and a bright flash, out stepped a man with a long, white beard. He had a pointed hat and a cloak. “Wow! A wizard!” cried the children. “No, a magician!” said the Fat Controller. “Our special guest!” Percy explained that bad coal had slowed him down and caused the sparks. “They made you look like the perfect Wizard Express,” smiled Thomas, kindly.

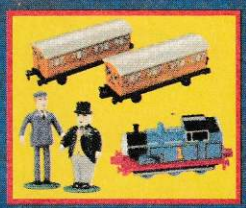
Star Letter

Dear Fat Controller,
I don't like having my hair washed. Do the engines complain when they are being cleaned?

from Gareth Morgan, aged 3.

Some engines hate to be cleaned, especially Gordon who always says he's too busy. James on the other hand, enjoys being washed and likes to have his dome polished until it's shining!



If we print your STAR LETTER, you will receive a Fat Controller, a Porter, Thomas & Annie and Clarabel as a prize!
